China launched its longest manned space mission on Monday, sending two astronauts into orbit to spend a month aboard a space laboratory that is part of a broader plan to have a permanent manned space station in service around 2022.

The Shenzhou 11 blasted off on a Long March rocket at 7:30 am (2330 GMT) from the remote launch site in Jiuquan, in the Gobi desert, in images carried live on state television.

Chinese astronauts, state media reported.

Early on Monday, Fan Changlong, a vice chairman of China's powerful Central Military Commission, met astronauts Jing Haipeng and Chen Dong and wished them well, state news agency Xinhua reported.

"You are going to travel in space to pursue the space dream of the Chinese nation," Fan said.

"With all the scientific and rigorous training, discreet preparation, and rich experience accumulated from previous missions, you will accomplish the glorious and tough task... We wish you success and look forward to your triumphant return."

Shenzhou 11 is the third space voyage for Jing, who will command the mission and celebrate his 50th birthday in orbit.

other nations using space-based assets in a crisis.

China has been working to develop its space program for military, commercial and scientific purposes, but is still playing catch-up to established space powers the United States and Russia.

China's Jade Rabbit moon rover landed on the moon in late 2013 to great national fanfare, but soon suffered severe technical difficulties.

The rover and the Chang'e 3 probe that carried it there were the first "soft landing" on the moon since 1976. Both the United States and the Soviet Union had accomplished the feat earlier.

China will launch a "core module" for its first space station some time around 2018, a senior official said in April, part of a plan for a permanent manned space station in service around 2022.

While the iPhone 6S and iPhone 6S Plus use battery sizes of 1,715 mAh and 2,750 mAh, respectively, iPhone 6 and 6 Plus use 1,810 mAh and 2,915 mAh Storage: The 16GB iPhone may no longer exist. The new version will come with minimum 32GB storage.

Speaker grill at the bottom: According to a report from Chinese website MyDrivers, the new iPhone will have a second "speaker grill" at the bottom and no separate headphone slot. It is likely to sport a USB Type-C port, and need wireless bluetooth headphones or a headphone that connects to the lightning port Camera: There will be a protruding camera. There might also be sport optical image stabilisation (the picture will not shake even if your hand trembles while shooting). Design: A video from Nowhereelse.fr reveals the device will be close to the iPhone 6s in terms of design and size. There will be fewer antenna bands on the back. Spoiler alert: An all-glass iPhone may be Apple's blockbuster for the 10th anniversary edition, according to KGI's securities' Ming-Chi Kuo, known as the best Apple analyst. Nobody was expecting Apple to launch any new products in the wearables category this year till the time reports suggested that it will launch the next variant of the Apple Watch along with an improved variant of the old one. It was KGI analyst Ming-Chi Kuo again who seemed to have broken the news. According to a detailed note by the analyst, which was passed on to investors citing detailed plans of Apple's wearable for the next six months, the company is expected to launch two watches with moderate improvements over its predecessor. The second version, dubbed "Apple Watch 2," is also expected to share the same general design as current models, but will include a GPS radio and barometer for improved geo-location capabilities. A higher capacity battery will be included to power the advanced components, but its size will prohibit Apple's usual generational device slimming. Kuo also claims that Apple is not expected to change its wearable's form factor any time soon or at least before 2017 and the iPhone-maker might add LTE support for standalone cellphone and data functionality in about a year's time. Improvements on design, better health applications and FDA approval may also come in 2018. He also expects the company to ship between 10 million and 11 million units of all kinds of watches, up from between 7 million and 7.5 million for 2016. The company had announced incremental software changes to the WatchOS during its July event this year in order to create more use cases and boost sales of the product.

Peugeot buys used car retailer in diversification push

PSA Group, the maker of Peugeot, Citroen and DS cars, said on Monday it was buying a stake in a French online second-hand car retailer as it expands into new areas of business.

The carmaker is in exclusive talks with multi-brand car retailer Aramisauto to purchase a 30 percent holding, before injecting more cash through a capital increase to secure a majority stake, PSA said. Financial terms were not disclosed.

The deal will unlock "strong growth potential in a second-hand market that is twice the size of the new car market, but where we currently have little presence," said Marc Lechantre, head of the Paris-based company's used cars division.

Faced with the rise of car-sharing and digital mobility operators like Uber, many carmakers are eyeing an expansion into new businesses outside the traditional manufacturing and sale of new cars.

But PSA is going further than most under Chief Executive Carlos Tavares, who is also slashing production costs in the wake of the company's 2013-14 brush with bankruptcy.

Besides flagging a push into car-sharing, Tavares pledged to turn PSA into a leading player in multi-brand vehicle repairs and second-hand sales when he unveiled the second stage of a recovery plan in April.

The group is targeting a five-fold increase in parts sales through Mister Auto, the low-cost online retailer it acquired last year. It also plans to launch car-sharing services in Los Angeles in partnership with Bolloré Group.

PSA has shed some 7,200 French jobs in the past two years and continues to reduce headcount through voluntary departures. The company declined to comment on reports that another 2,000 positions will be eliminated in 2017.

Lechantre said the acquisition of Aramisauto, with 360 million euros ($403 million) in annual sales, would help PSA double its second-hand car sales to 800,000 vehicles by 2021. The group will also bolster its own Peugeot and Citroen used-car networks and launch similar operations for the younger DS brand.

Wider the waistline, greater the breast cancer risk: study

Washboard abs, it now appears, are not just desirable for cosmetic reasons. A higher waist circumference and waist-to-hip ratio — or central obesity — can increase the risk of breast cancer by three times among South Asian women, a new study has found. The study, published recently by Elsevier, was conducted at the Tata Memorial Hospital and cites central obesity as a key risk factor for breast cancer among both premenopausal and postmenopausal women. Doctors who authored the study say the findings have a strong public health message — to control that expanding waistline, irrespective of age. The study also busts the BMI (body mass index) link to breast cancer. "High BMI protects pre-menopausal women from breast cancer, while a high BMI in post-menopausal women increases the risk. So, BMI is not an indicator. But central obesity, which is based on waist circumference, increases the risk threefold for all kinds of breast cancers among both pre- and post-menopausal women," Dr. Rajesh Dikshit, professor of epidemiology and in-charge, Public Health, Tata Memorial Centre, who has co-authored the study, told The Hindu on Wednesday. A flabby abdomen is a breast cancer risk for all tumour subtypes, says the study. "Furthermore, the association of central obesity with increased insulin levels and insulin-like growth factors may stimulate the growth of breast cancer cells," it states. Conducted over nearly five years, the study had participants from across India, but a majority of them were from western parts of the country. The participants mapped their increase in body size (based on pictograms they were shown) from the time they were 10. Accelerated growth in the 10-20-year age category — be it weight or height — was identified as cause for concern. "If there is a sudden increase in weight

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

PM's initiative of Digital India

What we need today is more and more use of modern technology and equipment along with traditional wisdom of farming in order to boost the agriculture sector. It is clear that farmers, who have been paying a 6% commission and 1% market fee in the existing wholesale markets, will only have the advantage of taking their goods to the seller who will offer them the best price for their goods. Prime minister's initiative of 'Digital India' will certainly help the farmers by giving them access to information on the best price offered for farm produce on their mobile phones in an instant. Let us see how practical will it be for farmers to sell their product directly to consumers and also for consumers to reach them.
